Applicant requests remand for the purpose of properly responding to the examining attorney's brief. This case presents an opportunity for the Board to decide an important issue for brand owners in the pharmaceutical and dietary supplements industries respectively. Applicant wishes to submit evidence that would rebut the examining attorney's arguments with respect to the third-party registrations. This would allow the Board to make a much more informed decision with respect to the probative value of these third party registrations in accordance with Mucky Duck.

FDA regulation of drugs versus dietary supplements

All prescription and non-prescription drugs are regulated in the United States by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA). But dietary supplements are treated more like special foods.

Because supplements aren't considered drugs, they aren't put through the same strict safety and effectiveness requirements that drugs are. So all the drugs you can buy, even without a prescription, must be proven safe and effective – but dietary supplements do not.

Drugs are considered unsafe until proven safe

In general, the FDA considers new drugs to be unsafe until they are proven safe through clinical trials. And the FDA must approve any new drug before it can be legally sold in the US. Clinical trials are studies done under well-controlled conditions on human volunteers. These tests must be done on all drugs – even those that are sold over the counter (without a prescription). The FDA approval process requires that the drug be proven in a series of clinical trials. These studies must show “substantial evidence” that the drug is both safe and effective for each of its intended uses. (See Clinical Trials: What You Need to Know for more on this process.)

Once the FDA approves the drug, it must be manufactured under carefully monitored conditions and packaged with complete information on the best dose, route, and schedule. The package information must also include:

- Conditions the drug has been proven to treat
- Known side effects

- Contraindications (special conditions under which using the drug should not be used because it would cause too much risk)
- Unsafe interactions with other drugs

Once the general public is using a new drug, the FDA follows up on any ill effects patients and their doctors report (see “How to report adverse reactions” in the section called “Guidelines for choosing dietary supplements safely”). The drug company is required to file information they get about side effects as well. This data helps ensure that any side effects not seen in the clinical trials will eventually be found and tracked for the safety of other people.

While counterfeit medicines are sometimes made and circulated, they don’t usually get into wide circulation unless they’re being distributed outside of the usual channels (such as from undocumented internet pharmacies). This is because drugs are typically seen by doctors, pharmacists, and nurses. When counterfeit drugs do make it into the system, health professionals often notice the differences in response between the real and fake drugs so that they are caught quickly. The FDA takes quick action when these problems are found.

Dietary supplements are considered safe until proven unsafe

In 1994, the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act (DSHEA) defined dietary supplements as a category of food, which put them under different regulations than drugs. They are considered safe until proven otherwise. The DSHEA says that dietary supplements cannot contain anything that may have “a significant or unreasonable risk of illness or injury” when the supplement is used as directed on the label, or with normal use if there are no directions on the label.

A dietary supplement is considered “new” if it contains an ingredient not recognized as a food substance, unless it was sold as a supplement before October 1994. If it is new, the manufacturer must provide the FDA with reasonable evidence that the new ingredient is safe before the supplement is marketed to the public.

But manufacturers are not required to test new ingredients or supplements in clinical trials, which would help find risks and potential interactions with drugs or other substances. The DSHEA gives the FDA permission to stop a company from making a dietary supplement, but only when the FDA proves that the product poses a significant risk to the health of Americans. This means they are found unsafe only after they cause harm. This is the reverse of the way prescription and non-prescription drugs are handled.

Dietary supplements are usually self-prescribed, so there’s no controlled system for reporting bad reactions and side effects. Doctors and patients can report problems, but are not required to do so. If a supplement has unknown side effects or interactions with other drugs, foods, or supplements, they are not likely to be discovered as quickly as those of new drugs on the market.

What kinds of problems have there been with supplements and herbs?

Many dietary supplements have clean safety histories. For instance, millions of people take multi-vitamins safely and have no ill effects. Many manufacturers are very careful with their claims, labeling, and the ingredients they use in their products.

But since they became widely available in 1994, the FDA and some independent researchers have found problems with some dietary supplements. Products like herbs are sometimes tainted with germs, pesticides, or toxic heavy metals. Other supplements do not contain what’s listed on the label. Still others contain more or less than the amount of the herb listed on the label. And many have ingredients that aren’t listed on the label at all.

This problem extends beyond the supplement makers and sellers. Some herbal suppliers (those who grow, harvest, or sell the crops) may mix or even substitute their crops with less expensive or more readily available plants. There’s also the problem of accidental contamination, when one plant grows in with others, as well as cases of mistaken identity (when one plant looks like another). Given the global market, all of these problems can make it harder for a company to be sure that what they thought they were buying to make supplements is actually the herb they wanted.

In 2013 researchers in Toronto published a report in which they sampled and analyzed 44 herbal supplements. The supplements were sold in both the US and Canada, and labeled as containing single herbs. Using DNA bar coding analysis, less than half the supplements (48%) contained any of the herb listed on the label. More than half of the supplements contained something that wasn’t on the label (substitutions or fillers). Even among the samples that contained the herb on the label, many also contained fillers or contaminants.

And again in early 2015, the New York Attorney General sent warning letters to major retailers who sold supplements that were shown by DNA testing to be mislabeled. Although they're not tested very often, careful studies find that many supplements are not what they are supposed to be.

A more serious trend today is extra ingredients in supplements. Some "herbal" supplements have been found to contain prescription drugs or other compounds that are not listed on their labels. For example, some supplement ads are targeted to men as "enhancers" or muscle builders. Certain of these so-called "supplements" have been found to contain substances much like Viagra® or Cialis®, and have been recalled. "Prostate health" supplements have been found to contain terazosin, a prescription drug used to treat the symptoms of an enlarged prostate. Other ads target women and tout the supplement as an aid to weight loss. Some of these "weight loss supplements" contained the weight loss drug sibutramine, which was banned in the United States because of the risk of heart attack and stroke. The supplement makers recall these only after they have been found to have these illegal additives. Then the FDA can seize these drugs and prosecute the companies who make them.

There are also times that new ingredients with little-known effects are slipped into supplements. In one situation, supplements were labeled as being made from geranium but turned out to contain the stimulant drug dimethylamylamine (DMAA). This type of supplement was sold as a "natural stimulant," but it contained DMAA, a man-made drug. The DMAA-containing supplements were exposed after some serious events, including several deaths, leading the FDA to send warning letters to US manufacturers in 2013.

These kinds of extras can cause serious health issues for people who take the supplement. There are also risks of mystery drug interactions because the person doesn't know that he or she is taking a drug.

Despite all these issues, the FDA is not legally responsible for the safety of dietary supplements; the manufacturers are. The manufacturers are also responsible for what's in them, and being sure the contents are the same from one pill or package to another. The FDA only looks into reported problems or safety hazards. To find out more about what's in a supplement, the manufacturer is your first contact.

To avoid tainted supplements, don't buy any of these:

- Products that claim to work like prescription drugs – anything that claims to treat an illness or cure a medical condition
- Products that are advertised through mass e-mails
- Products marketed mainly in a foreign language
- Products that promise weight loss, body-building, or enhanced sexual performance
- Products that say they are a legal alternative to anabolic steroids

UNIT 3D: DIETARY SUPPLEMENTS AND OVER-THE-COUNTER DRUGS

Summary of Chapter 12 Information

Dietary supplements and over-the-counter drugs may look the same to consumers on the drugstore shelves, but they are regulated in very different ways. A drug is defined as a product intended for use in the diagnosis, cure, mitigation, treatment, or prevention of disease. Over-the-counter drugs must be proven to be safe, effective, pure, and accurately labeled as well as approved by the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) before they go on the market.

In contrast, dietary supplements are regulated much more like food products. They must be safe and pure but they are not required to show that they are effective or provide any benefit. In terms of safety, the burden of proof is on the FDA to show that a product presents a significant risk of illness or injury. For example, in the case of the stimulant ephedra, it took the FDA about 10 years from initial reports of problems to compile evidence to get ephedra banned. Dietary supplements may include vitamins, minerals, herbs, amino acids, and enzymes in a variety of forms.

The labels of dietary supplements look like the labels for food products and include basic information about the content of the product. The FDA authorizes a small number of health claims that food and supplement manufacturers can use if their products meet certain requirements. Supplements can also make claims about improving the structure or function of the body or overall well-being. These structure/function claims are not regulated or approved by the FDA, and they must carry a disclaimer stating that the product is not designed to treat or prevent a disease.

The differences in the regulation of supplements and drugs mean that many more dietary supplements have become available, giving consumers more options. However, much less research is available about the safety and effectiveness of supplements compared to over-the-counter drugs. Even popular products such as Saint-John's-wort and ginkgo biloba have relatively little research about their actions, safety, and effectiveness. Supplements also can interact dangerously with drugs and other supplements, and consumers need to use caution.

Over-the-counter drugs include ingredients that have been evaluated by the FDA and determined to be generally recognized as safe, effective, and accurately labeled. Uniform labels for over-the-counter drugs help consumers compare products, follow the instructions for safe and effective use, and understand key cautions and warnings.

For a given category of over-the-counter drug, most brands contain the same few ingredients.

For example, over-the-counter stimulants all contain caffeine, while over-the-counter sleep aids contain antihistamines. The widely used category of pain-killing drugs, also known as analgesics, includes aspirin, acetaminophen, and ibuprofen. Aspirin has analgesic, antipyretic, and anti-inflammatory actions.

Acetaminophen, ibuprofen, and other so-called nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs have related effects. Overuse of any of the over-the-counter analgesics carries the risk of stomach or liver damage.

Cold and allergy remedies are also widely used. Cold remedies often contain some combination of an antihistamine, an analgesic, and a decongestant. Because many over-the-counter remedies are based on a small number of approved ingredients, an informed consumer can understand a large proportion of these products by being familiar with only a few drugs.

STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES

After reading this chapter, you should be able to:

- Explain the legal distinction between drugs and dietary supplements, particularly with regard to health-related claims.
- Understand the implications of the 1994 Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act.
- Recognize Saint John's wort, SAMe, and ginkgo biloba as dietary supplements intended to have psychoactive effects.
- Explain the concepts behind the terms GRAS and GRAE.
- Name the only active ingredient allowed in OTC stimulants.
- Explain the risks of PPA and ephedra, and describe how their removal from the market impacted OTC products promoted for weight loss.

- Name the primary ingredient in OTC sleep aids.
- Describe the benefits and dangers of aspirin.
- Explain what is meant by NSAID and give some examples.
- Name the four types of ingredients found in many OTC cold and allergy drugs and give a common example of each type.

About AtheroNova

AtheroNova Inc. is a biotechnology company focused on the research and development of compounds to safely regress atherosclerotic plaque and improve lipid profiles in humans. Cardiovascular plaque reduction – the holy grail of cardiovascular research¹ – is our business. Our lead compound, AHRO-001, has demonstrated remarkable plaque reduction in animals. We have shown a strong safety and tolerability profile for AHRO-001 in a Phase I clinical trial in humans. Our current corporate focus is the preparation and filing of an IND with the US Food & Drug Administration for clinical development in the United States and rest of the world. Atherosclerosis and its complications cost consumers more than $38 billion annually in the United States alone.

Novirin®: Natural Antiviral Treatment

Are you infected with one of the following viruses?

(Click on the name of the virus for more specific information.)

- Human Papillomavirus (HPV)
- Herpes Virus (HSV)
- Epstein-Barr Virus (EBV)
- Hepatitis C Virus (HCV) or Hepatitis B Virus (HBV)
- Shingles Virus (Varicella Zoster Virus (VZV), chickenpox virus, herpes zoster virus, human herpesvirus type 3 (HHV-3))

Take Novirin.

But does it really work? After all, it is only a natural product... It's not a drug...

Yes it does work. A clinical study, which followed FDA guidelines, showed that the Novirin formula safely and effectively decreased symptoms in infected individuals. You can find the list of symptoms in method section of the study attached below.

Fatigue

Are you suffering from chronic fatigue?
Are you suffering from chronic physical or mental fatigue?

Are you infected with HPV, HSV, EBV, CMV, or HCV?

Then you do suffer from chronic fatigue!

You just don't know it!

Read about the relationship between viruses and fatigue, and how Novirin can reduce your physical and mental fatigue.

You can do better. Learn how.

The clinical study was published in the medical journal Pharmacology and Pharmacy, in a special edition called Advances in Antiviral Drugs. The clinical study concluded that the product that delivered the Novirin formula is a safe and effective treatment against these viruses.

The study says: "... the clinical study showed that (the Novirin formula) is a safe and effective treatment against the Human Papillomavirus (HPV), Herpes Simplex Virus (HSV), Epstein Barr Virus (EBV), Human Cytomegalovirus (HCMV), and Hepatitis C Virus (HCV). Therefore, health care practitioners should recommend (the Novirin formula) as a safe and effective antiviral treatment against these viruses."

This study provides a scientific proof that the Novirin formula actually works. To quote from the study, "this study showed that the natural product (that delivered the Novirin formula) safely and effectively decreases symptoms in individuals infected with the HPV, HSV, EBV, HCMV, and HCV."

Although it is written in a language suitable for scientists, we urge you to read the scientific paper that reported the results of the clinical study that showed that the Novirin formula decreased symptoms of a viral infection.

Research shows that an infection with one of the viruses above causes a feeling of physical and mental fatigue. Since Novirin is antiviral, a second clinical study showed that the product that delivered the Novirin formula decreased the feeling of physical and mental fatigue associated with a viral infection. This study provides a second scientific proof that the Novirin formula actually works. As far as we know, Novirin is the only natural formula on the market that was clinically tested, and the results published in a peer-reviewed scientific journal.

This scientific publication means that you don't have to take our word for it. It also means that you can ignore what fake customers and masked competitors, such as pharmaceutical companies and sellers of untested and unproven natural remedies, write in various forums and message boards.

The publication of the clinical study means that now you have an objective, independent, expert opinion you can trust.

The Novirin formula is different than other formulas. It is unique since it targets latent viruses. When one of these viruses enters your body, it settles in a certain organ and becomes latent. Most of the time, most of the viruses in your body are in a latent state. A latent virus is not a disease. To quote from the FDA:

"Some viruses, however, can enter a state known as latency in which the virus is not being replicated. In the latent state, the virus does not cause disease."

See more quotes on the difference between latent infection and disease, here.

We specialize in targeting latent viruses. After years of research, we developed the Novirin formula, a natural formula that helps the immune system target the latent viruses in your body.

The Novirin formula is the product of our unique scientific process. We designed this formula by analyzing thousands of scientific papers with our proprietary computer program. The objective was to identify safe natural ingredients with a strong antiviral effect. In this process, the computer analyzed more than 50,000 scientific studies. Our development process is unique in this regard. Not even the best doctors or most qualified scientists have read all these studies.

The computer assisted us in selecting five ingredients and their specific concentrations: Green Tea Extract, Quercetin, Licorice Extract, Cinnamomum Extract, and Selenium.

Many scientific studies showed that these five ingredients have an antiviral effect, and specifically, that they decrease the latent viral load. See a partial list of these studies here. Following the list, you can find a detailed description of some of these studies. This description can help you understand how the scientists concluded that these ingredients decrease the latent viral load.

Also, see a scientific study published in the scientific journal Acta Oncologica that showed that the Novirin formula boosts the efficiency of the immune system of a cancer patient. According to the paper: The Novirin formula "is a broad range, natural antiviral supplement that targets viruses during their latent or chronic phase." In addition, the paper says: "After five weeks (of treatment with the Novirin formula), ... blood test showed an increase in the concentration of lymphocytes (1.72x10³ cells/μl compared with 0.70x10³ cells/μl), eosinophils (0.11x10³ cells/μl compared with 0 cells/μl) and basophils (0.02x10³ cells/μl compared with 0 cells/μl), the new numbers being in normal range." (Lymphocytes, eosinophils, and basophils are cells of the immune system.) See link to full paper here.

Do you want to boost your immune system against the latent viruses in your body? Take Novirin.

Why do you need Novirin? Because your immune system is inefficient.

If your immune system would have been efficient, it would have eliminated all the latent viruses in your body, and you would have had no latent viruses. The fact that you have a latent infection indicates that your immune system is working at less than 100% efficiency (maybe 50%? 70%? ...).

What decreases the efficiency of the immune system?

1. Stress. Extensive research shows that stress decreases the efficiency of the immune system.

2. Aging. The efficiency of the immune system declines with age. That is, the older you are, the less efficient is your immune system.

3. Medications. Drugs, especially those taken for months or years, such as those that lower cholesterol, or lower blood pressure, decrease the efficiency of the immune system.

4. Medical procedures. Surgery, diagnostic procedures, chemotherapy, etc. put enormous pressure on the immune system.

5. Radiation. X-Ray radiation, UV rays, sunlight, and cell phone radiation decrease the efficiency of the immune system.

Why should you care about the latent viruses in your body? Because they can start to replicate and cause nasty symptoms, such as blisters, warts, sores, and abnormal growths on your skin. They can also cause major diseases. See more on latent viruses and major diseases. here.

And how do you boost your immune system against the latent viruses in your body? By taking Novirin.

Do you want to target the latent virus infecting your body? Take Novirin.

Discreet and Confidential

Many people are infected with latent viruses. However, most of them don't want others to know about it. An infection is a private matter, and most people would like their infection to remain confidential. To protect your privacy, we do the following:

Testimonials

"I used Lite-Burn for 30 days and lost 8 pounds. I didn't change my eating habits, I just found that I wasn't as hungry as I used to be." -Joey H.
(Results may vary from person to person.)

"After taking LiteBurn for 2 weeks I noticed I was losing inches from my waist. My wife said I look slimmer and that is a good thing. I also had an extra boost in my energy levels."
-Tony G (Results may vary from person to person.) -

"I love the Lite Burn formula. And, I used one whole bottle as samples to give to all of my friends. All of them love it too. We average losing 4 pounds in 7 days by only taking 1 capsule per day." -DR. from Oklahoma (Results may vary from person to person.)

"I love the smooth energy from taking the LiteBurn formula and I averaging 4 pounds per week and I am losing inches." -AD from Georgia

Product Information on Lite Burn

Lose inches/lose weight - Garcinia Cambogia may add in the reduction of fat cells forming, and increase weight loss. Plum Extract helps you to lose weight by keeping your cells in an alkaline state. Cells in a healthy body are bathed in an alkaline fluid. In the body an acidic environment (opposite of alkaline) causes an imbalance in these cells, which can lead to sickness and storing extra fat in the body tissue. When combined with plenty of rest, exercise and healthy eating, Lite Burn can help you achieve your weight loss goals in no time! Fat Burn

Fat Burn - LiteBurn acts as a Thermogenic: When you exercise, you naturally increase your body's core temperature, thus boosting your metabolism naturally. Our herbal thermogenic fat burners cause your body temperature to increase in a similar fashion, whether or not you are exercising, thus boosting your metabolism naturally and giving you rapid results! Reduce Cravings & Appetite

Reduce Cravings & Appetite - Garcinia Cambogia, is a fruit from Southeast Asia. This amazing herb controls hunger and cravings while boosting mood and energy. It is a unique herb, as it targets belly fat reduction while helping to build lean muscle tissue. Take one or two capsules a day to increase energy and decrease hunger cravings. Boost

(Results may vary from person to person.)

"I take Lite Burn as soon as I wake up in the morning before I go to my work out and it gives me the energy I need. Throughout the day I feel alert and positive, and I no longer crave unhealthy snacks. My first month on Lite Burn and working out I lost 4 lbs. and 2% body fat. It's amazing!"

-Heather B.

(Results may vary from person to person.)

Note: to lose weight, you must combine sensible good eating with regular exercise that works the whole body. Exercise and proper diet are critical to achieving and maintaining weight loss. Also make sure that you are drinking enough good quality water every day.

Energy

Boost Energy - Lite-Burn's unique, herbal synergistic blend provides a natural boost of energy without the crash.
Enhance Mood

Enhance Mood - Our east meets west balance of vitamins and herbs helps to increase serotonin levels, restore your balance, improve your mood and promote feelings of well-being. Increased levels of serotonin are known to increase blood flow and oxygen to the brain which can be highly beneficial, leading to not only better mood but also improved motivation, energy levels, and memory. With LiteBurn you'll feel happier with your personal physique, leading to less stress, more energy, and a more joyous, balanced life.

THE BENEFITS

DOCTOR RECOMMENDED!

Thayer's Witch Hazel with Aloe Vera Formula Astringents and Alcohol-Free Toners are soothing, natural treatments that cleanse, tone and soothe your skin. Made of extract from the Witch Hazel shrub and a blend of other time-tested ingredients, these natural elixirs containing important tannins have been a fixture in medicine cabinets for generations. Once you use them, you'll know why.

THE BENEFITS

SOOTHES & HEALS

Trusted by tenors, teachers, tour guides and other types who holl, talk and belch, Thayer's Slippery Elm Lozenges speed relief to the throat and mouth. They're also free of preservatives, gluten, lactose and sodium, making them the all-vegetable remedy of choice for vegan vocalists. Dissolve one in your mouth before you sing, talk or use your voice; take another one afterward to soothe the membranes and heal any oral abrasions.

THE BENEFITS

INSTANT MOISTURE!

Thayer's Sugar-Free Dry Mouth Sprays and Lozenges provide saliva-replacing moisture, delivering instant relief from the debilitating dryness caused by prescription medicines, stress, chemotherapy, radiation, smoking, aging, diabetes, asthma, Sjögren's syndrome, Lupus, hypertension, allergies and other factors. Sprays are a perfect saliva replacement and lozenges are an ideal saliva stimulant. Whatever you choose, we've got the best way to wet your whistle.
